Preparing for Hurricane Season

A Message from Tony Ruggeri, Claims Manager

Reports have been issued by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration \(NOAA\) that predict this year's hurricane season will be above normal. The hurricane season runs from June 1 to November 30. The NOAA believes there is a 45% chance of above-normal activity for hurricane season, a 35% chance of a near-normal season and a 20% chance of a below-normal activity. It is being forecasted that the Atlantic hurricane region could expect 5-9 hurricanes, including 2-4 that could be severe. This compares to the average season, which produces six hurricanes, including three major hurricanes.

Please prepare for the possibility of an above-normal Atlantic hurricane season. Should an event occur, the NJSIG team is prepared to respond to weather-related emergencies such as hurricanes, hailstorms, tornadoes and floods. Being prepared and knowing how to respond is key to helping you cope with a catastrophic loss. Nothing is more important than getting help to our Members after a disaster. We are dedicated to being there whenever and wherever you need us. Members can report losses any time, day or night by calling our 24/7 emergency line (609) 369-0535 or online at www.njsig.org.
